LOYALTY AND RELIGION. Interesting Exercises on Children's Day at

Hamline Church. Religious belief and patriotic utterance were cleverly combined in the celebration of children's day at Hamline M. E. Church yester- ing will find in the notes below many attracday morning. The little folks are especially plentiful in that congregation, which is the largest and has the reputation of being the liveliest aggregation of Methodism in the District of Columbia, and they turned out in great, force to celebrate the occasion in which there is such deep general interest. With them were fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers, to say nothing of the grandparents, uncles, aunts, cousins and other more remote

AN IMMENSE TERONG.

They crowded the spacious structure long before it was time for service to commence, and when the opening hymn was sung there was no better accommodation for the late comers than standing room, and very little of that. The lower floor of the big audience chamber was temporarily sacred to the Sunday school, and as Hamline Sunday school has nearly a thousand young people on its rolls, there were but few pews for the older folk, so most of them went pews for the older folk, so most of them went upstairs and occupied seats or vacant spaces in the galleries. The decorations were less elaborate than in some years past, but it was more significant, for they indicated that the Methodist Episcopal Church—always a staunchly patriotic institution—intends to so blend loyalty to God and country that separation of the two will not be easy for any of its tion of the two will not be easy for any of its scholars. From the ceiling to the gallery fronts streamers of starred and striped bunting swung gracefully, at their lower ends effecting harmonious junction with artistically draped samples of the national colors. The platform, fringed with flowers and elsewhere made autiful by the use of potted plants.

THE EXERCISES. After preliminary hymn and prayer and an ouncement by Superintendent T. B. Towner the Rev. E. S. Todd, D.D., Hamline's pastor, fourteen little ones—a smaller crop than is common at Hamline. All the babies behaved most decorously, receiving without protest names that in later years they may most warmly dislike. "Columbia's Defenses" was the title of the exercises that followed the wholesale christening. Columbia was represented by Miss Belle McKenzie, whose costume was measing and appropriate. Mr. M. A. Watson made the introductory address, after Watson made the introductory address, after which the six guards, each wearing on their left arms the national shield, suitably inscribed, also gave expression to pieusly patriotic sentiment that in each instance evoked from Columbia a fitting rejoinder. The guards were Ray Moulton, "Just Laws;" Fred. Saxty, "Worthy Rulers;" Maynard Twitchell, "Good Citizens;" Miss Elsie Belt, "Christian Schools;" Miss Jennie May Mickle, "A Sacred Sabbath;" Miss Maud Tracy, "Pure Religion." A chorus of fifteen little boys and girls—Eva Seitz, Bessie Dolan, Marie Seitz, Maggie Bell, Violet Dolan, Virginia Andrews, Ozella Ballard, Jessie Holden, Sadie Weaver, Eddie Thomas, Stanley Hursey, Riffard Mickle, Annie Kneesi, Gertie Gotwells and Frank Moulton—each car-NATIONAL LAW SCHOOL.
